

Santa Searches for Mrs. Claus

It was a few weeks before Christmas, and the North Pole was busier than ever. The elves ran around with toys, while the reindeer tapped their hooves excitedly on the ice.

But one thing made Santa nervous this winter: he had lost Mrs. Claus.

“Never before,” he muttered, scratching his belly, “have I lost my Mrs. Claus during the preparations!”

The elves giggled quietly because they knew Santa often got confused without her.

Santa straightened his red coat and put his tall hat on, determined to find her.

He started at the reindeer stable, but only curious reindeer sniffed and shook their heads.

“Not here,” he sighed, taking his sleigh to walk through the village.

The snow crunched under his heavy boots as he passed twinkling lights and decorated houses.

Suddenly, something sparkled behind an ice bear statue: it looked like a red glittery shoe.

“Could this be a clue?” he asked hopefully and ran to the shoe.

To his shock, it was only an elf’s sock that had fallen in the snow.

“Ah, what a day,” he said, shaking his head as snowflakes fell on his hat.

But he did not give up and decided to make a list of possible places she could be: the reindeer stable, the cookie kitchen, and the toy workshop.

First, he went to the cookie kitchen, where a huge pot of freshly baked cookies steamed.

He knocked on the door and called, “Mrs. Claus! Are you here?”

An elf piped up, “Nope, she’s not in the kitchen. Want a cookie?”

Santa took a cookie but kept thinking: where could she be?

Next, he ran to the workshop, where elves were busy wrapping toys and loading the sleigh.

“Have you seen my Mrs. Claus?” he asked the oldest elf.

The elf scratched his ear and said, “Maybe in the Christmas forest?”

The Christmas forest was dark, but twinkling lights and glistening snow hung everywhere.

Santa walked carefully among the trees, straightening his red gloves.

Suddenly, he heard loud laughter and the sound of bells: someone was having fun!

He followed the sound and to his great relief saw Mrs. Claus playing with the reindeer.

“There you are!” he called joyfully, hugging her and tossing a snowball that landed softly on her back.

“Sorry,” she said, “I wanted to surprise you with a new reindeer dance.”

Santa laughed heartily and decided to bring extra cookies this year to celebrate the adventure.

They walked back to the workshop together, and the elves applauded and cheered. Santa took a deep breath, "What would I do without you? Probably eat cookies everywhere and get lost!"

Mrs. Claus laughed, "Without me, you'd probably crash the sleigh into the snow."

They hung their coats and started wrapping toys together, while the elves still giggled.

The reindeer ran around happily, and their bells filled the air with joy.

Everyone worked together, laughing at Santa's jokes, including when he accidentally put reindeer ears on his head.

After hours of work, they sat by the fireplace with hot chocolate and Christmas cookies.

"What an adventure," said Santa, almost forgetting to chew in his excitement.

Mrs. Claus squeezed his hand gently: "Next year, no adventures without each other."

The elves nodded and whispered that they had a new prank ready for next Christmas, but nothing too dangerous.

Santa smiled, thinking that even a little chaos at the North Pole could be full of joy.

They enjoyed the evening, listening to the soft snow outside and the jingle of the reindeer bells.

Laughter filled the room, and it felt as if the world paused just for them.

They decided to tell the story of the search for Mrs. Claus to all new elves every year.

"It's a lesson," said Mrs. Claus, "that even Santa sometimes needs help and that laughing is important."

Santa nodded in agreement and took another sip of hot chocolate.

Everyone felt happy, and for the first time, the North Pole seemed warmer than ever, despite the snow and cold outside.

That night, they all slept with smiles, knowing they had shared an unforgettable Christmas.
